In the latest version of Aptana the shell script I'm trying to open is included in an older version of Aptana. In the file browser, I click on the shell script file, and Aptana opens the file, but does not execute the file. If I try to execute it, I get a "This file type is not supported". Is there any way to change the setting so that Aptana will treat the file like a shell script and execute it? A: Aptana is a Java app, not a shell. You can't "execute" shell scripts from it. You could probably "run" them via the shell's sh command. On Linux, you'd run `sh script.sh` On Windows, you'd run `cmd script.sh` In Aptana, that would open a shell with your file already there. Depending on your shell, you might also be able to just save the file and then run it directly (making Aptana ignore it as a file type). You could also, instead of using Aptana, just run your file through the shell. Something like this, based on the command shell usually uses, where the first argument is the shell, and the rest is the command to be run: `$ sh -e script.sh` Q: How can i get the path to the database file I have a database file that I'm using for my ASP.NET MVC 3 website, which is placed on the server. I want to generate/copy the same to a local location so that I can debug easily. How can I know where that database file (created by my asp.net mvc project) is located? My file path is C:\570a42141b
