The Philadelphia 76ers are interested in a 'Danny Granger type' big man, but are not interested in going past 12th pick, according to Michael Lee of The Philadelphia Inquirer. In regard to Danny Granger's big man label, I'll go out on a limb and say that's a bit of an oversell. Last week, we were told that Philadelphia's offer to Evan Turner was for eight years and $80 million. The only wrinkle is that they'll actually ask him to sign a contract that's worth nearly $10 million a year and not sign until he's 27. The Sixers have discussed some names and are looking at interior players, but they're not in love with any of them, according to Lee. Raymar Morgan, Marvin Williams and Amir Johnson are names mentioned and a client of Rob Pelinka's in Phoenix, but the Sixers aren't really high on any of those guys. The 76ers could have interest in smaller-sized big men such as T.J. Mbakwe or Carlos Boozer, but they wouldn't be willing to go past the 12th pick. have access to the full MERS-CoV genome sequences from camels, which can help to better understand its origin and evolution ([@bib6]), which may even assist in the development of drugs and vaccines. In summary, we sequenced the full genome of MERS-CoV isolated from a six-year old dromedary camel in Al-Ahsa, Saudi Arabia. The genome of MERS-CoV is highly conserved and most likely does not belong to a new species. It is closely related to the human strains isolated in 2012 in Saudi Arabia. Al-Ahsa is a popular border town that is frequently visited by people coming from neighboring countries in the Middle East
