A: By default, Bootstrap takes the widths of your div's and determines its width. It also makes sure that it is always centered horizontally by using centering in the offset classes. So, if you want to center vertically, you need to resize the div's. This is impossible with offsets, because they are width based. You can center a div by using the.center class from Twitter Bootstrap. Just add that class to the div you want to center. But, if the div is bigger than the window, it won't be center-ed. Is that what you want? See it in action here: I updated the JSFiddle with your code. Code: With this CSS: .center { margin-top:100px; } Hope that helps.
