In the upcoming presidential elections in France, far-right leader Marine Le Pen has pointed out that she is in favor of implementing eugenics as a system to decide who is smart and who is not. In an interview with KPLU's Sound of Ideas, she explained that if she becomes president, she will enforce all the existing laws and change others to become more efficient. "We would always need to make two important moves," she said. "First, we would change the laws regarding abortions and the protection of children. We'd train people to avoid breeding with people who are clearly genetically inferior. We should also ban same-sex relationships." She continued: "I have worked with numerous doctors for the past seven years, so I know how to set up an eugenics program. Of course, we'd keep the present laws regarding euthanasia." There is also another issue that Le Pen brought up: the "inferior" immigrant population in France. "There are many people who have an inferior genetic profile," she said.
