The following is a brief description of Photoshop's features. For a complete description, please refer to the Photoshop Learning Center. Features Photoshop's interface is very easy to navigate. It shows all the layers and channels in the image. Each layer has its own separate channel, and you can use these channels to make adjustments. The fourth level of the Layers panel is the Adjustments panel. It shows any adjustments that have been made to the image. These adjustments include the levels, curves, exposure, and vignetting adjustments. The fifth level of the Layers panel is the History panel. It shows the layers that were used to make any of the adjustments in the Adjustments panel. The sixth level of the Layers panel is the Layer Comps panel. Contributions from the Sidney M. Wolfe National Institute on Aging will help sharpen the focus on major health needs in the aging U.S. population. The five-year project on Neighborhood and Population Health: Innovations through Aging Networks (NPAN) will: 1) explore best practices in designing, implementing, and sustaining comprehensive neighborhood-based community health improvement projects in diverse populations of older adults, and 2) evaluate the contributions of the structures, processes, and infrastructure of the aging network to the successes of these efforts. NPAN addresses major health problems in the elderly that are related to the physical, social, and psychological environments in which older adults live. Specific research strategies are to 1) conduct an evaluation study of innovative and effective aging networks and of the links between networks and their networks and communities; and 2) conduct an assessment of the role of the aging networks in the community health improvement programs that are most promising. The project will integrate insights from research, practice, policy and management, and learnings from ongoing collaboration between the Institute on Aging, the National Institute on Aging and the National Institute of Nursing Research. The project will be conducted in major U.S. cities using novel methods of collecting and analyzing data. These methods include: 1) the multi-level, multimethod, multi-source method of data collection used in the on-going NSF-funded NYC HANES-II; 2) the use of longitudinal data for measuring the impact of aging networks and for examining the impact of an aging network on its network; 3) the aggregation of existing data sources; 4) the use of specialized software and statistical methods; 5) the use of telephone and web surveys as alternative modes of data collection; 6) the testing of models that use the NSF-funded underwriting theory of social capital to explain links between aging networks and their networks and communities; and 7) the use of innovative methodological approaches such as dynamic network analysis, multilevel analysis and multi-source analysis. The results will be used to design strategies for the enhancement of existing aging network infrastructure, and the development of new networks and networks of networks that are appropriate for specific communities with particular health needs and resources.Marge Fisher Margaret Fisher was born in Knoxville, Tennessee.
