Wednesday, June 21, 2006 Greetings from the Lone Star State Welcome to our new home! It's great to be here. Texas is one of the best states in which to raise a family. We didn't know that when we moved to North Carolina four years ago, but we're glad we took the chance. We're lucky to live in a safe and secure city and we're close to both professional and college sports. It's a fun place to live and raise a family. Sadly, the one little problem we have is that we're a little too far from our family. We're pretty sure that we're not the only family who has lived here for 3 years and has never seen a single relative or family friend. The little Texas heat will wilt the last stragglers. It is hard to find other Texans. Most people from the South don't think that they need to meet their family (most of them), so that list is small. We're trying to do our part to get out more, but sometimes it's hard to get out of the house. Visiting is easy. We took the kids to see some relatives in the Dallas area and it was fun. We made friends with a small group of parents from a local community school. We met them at the playground and agreed to go out for dinner. We'll probably go out with them again. Having said that, we really don't make much effort to get out. We prefer to stay in and enjoy the quiet, the weather, and the convenience of living in an area with good schools. But with all of that, we're glad to be here and we're looking forward to having our family together, so long as we get out once in a while.

Evaluation of a fecal occult blood test in population-based screening for colorectal cancer. Many countries have developed a fecal occult blood test (FOBT) as a population-based mass screening test for colorectal cancer. The aim of this study was to evaluate the test by using a "2-stage" screening strategy for colorectal cancer. Of 300,000 people in Osaka city, we conducted a FOBT for those between 35 and 69 years old and a biopsy or colonoscopy for those who had positive results. The prevalence of colorectal cancer was approximately 1.5%. The sensitivity of the FOBT was 88.4%, the specificity was 95.2%, and the positive and negative predictive values were 12.6% and 99.9%, respectively. As a 2-stage screening strategy, the FOBT could detect approximately 80% of those with colorectal cancer. This screening strategy should be considered as a population-based screening program. in these cases was very satisfactory. Nevertheless, the utility of ECG and echocardiography is often underestimated and they should be used when the clinical investigation of cases of myocarditis is considered as useless. Our study presents some limitations. First, the number of patients was relatively small. Second, it was not possible to include all echocardiographic protocols. Indeed, myocarditis is difficult to diagnose and the diagnosis is based on histological confirmation. Despite this low level of evidence, our study suggests that echo, especially in the acute phase of myocarditis, is a useful diagnostic tool in the management of patients.
